Uncle Janice by Matt Burgess Come for the title, stay for the story. A title like “Uncle Janice” is going to attract your attention, as does the very well-done cover.

Uncle Janice : a novel

This is one helluva book. Burgess can really write --not just good clean sentences but singing prose that jumps off the page. I read lots of crime fiction and it rare when something fresh and new appears like Uncle Janice. The best way to describe the book is that it's an updated 87 th precinct novel, like Ed McBain wrote , with a post modern ...

“Uncle Janice,” the sophomore novel by Matt Burgess (“Dogfight, a Love Story”), is a refreshing cop novel featuring an unlikely yet necessary hero: Janice Itwaru, a mixed race, take-no-shit young policewoman from Queens.

Uncle Janice by Matt Burgess, Paperback | Barnes & Noble®

This crime novel written by Queens native Burgess (Dogfight, A Love Story, 2011) evokes some of that hurly-burly as it chronicles several tumultuous weeks in the life of Janice Itwaru, an NYPD covert op desperate to climb from the dreary if sometimes-hazardous swamp of petty street buys to a detective's gold shield. In the process, Janice, who lives with her sickly Indian mom in Richmond Hill, must cope with the ribald taunts and elaborate pranks of her fellow “uncles” (as in ...
